Low Churchman. [Cf. HIGH CHURCHMAN.]

A member of the Church of England holding opinions which give a low place to the authority and claims of the episcopate and priesthood, to the inherent grace of the sacraments, and to matters of ecclesiastical organization, and thus differ relatively little from the opinions held by Protestant Nonconformists.

The term, invented as an antithesis to High Churchman, was in the early part of the 18th c. used as equivalent to Latitudinarian. Afterwards it fell into disuse, but was revived in the 19th c., when the designation High Churchman had obtained a new currency as applied to those who inclined to the theology and ritual of pre-Reformation times. In this later use, Low Churchman has for the most part been viewed as equivalent to Evangelical, and has rarely been applied to members of the Broad Church School.

1702 Charac. Church-Man 18 He is for shewing the Low Church Men in their own proper Colours. 1703 DE FOE Short. Way Peace Misc. 463 We have had it Printed, with an Assurance I have wondered at, That the moderate Members of the Church of England, call'd Low Church Men, are worse than the Dissenters. 1708 Phoenix II. Pref. 13 It shows the first rise of that party which were afterwards called Latitudinarians, and are at this day our 'Low-Churchmen'. 1710 H. DEDFORD *Vind. Ch. WILBERFORCE in A. R. ASHVELL Life (1879) I. 314 Taking as your prominent subject . . . Baptismal Regeneration, and its side against Low Churchmen.

Hence Low-Churchmanism = Low-Churchism.

the word was app. introduced as a name for the fur of the lynx; for a similar instance of an adjective becoming a sb., cf. MARTEN.

The spelling lewzerne (quot. 1662), if not a misprint, is conclusive evidence in favour of this derivation. Etymologists have usually supposed the word to be an alteration of the OF. lucerne, leuserne, female lynx, a fem. of unexplained form corresponding to the masc. loup-cervier repr. L. lupus cervarius (Pliny) lynx, lit. 'stag-hunting wolf' (lupus wolf, cervarius adj. f. cervus stag). But this hypothesis does not account for the form of the Eng. word, nor can it be satisfactorily referred to the OF. loup cervin (as if *L. lupus cervinus = lupus cervarius) of which Godef. gives one example. Possibly there may have been in OF. a confusion between loup-cervier and an adopted Teut. synonym.]

2. The rebel archangel whose fall from heaven was supposed to be referred to in Isa. xiv. 12; Satan, the Devil. Now rare in serious use; current chiefly in the phrase As proud as Lucifer.

The Scripture passage (Vulg. 'Quomodo cecidisti de celo, Lucifer, qui mane oriebaris?') A.V. 'How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, sonne of the morning?') is part of a 'parable against the king of Babylon' (Isa. xiv. 41; but the mention of a fall from heaven led Christian interpreters to suppose that 'king of Babylon' was to be interpreted spiritually, as a designation of the chief of 'the angels who kept not their first estate'. Hence the general patristic view that Lucifer was the name of Satan before his fall. The Latin word was adopted in all the Eng. versions down to 1611; the Revised version has daystar.

Luck (lʊk), sb. Also 5-6 lūk (e, 6-7 lucke. [a. I.G. (Du., OFris.) lūk, a shortened form of geluk (MDu. gelucke = MHG. gelücke, mod.G. glück). Parallel adoptions of the I.G. word are Icel. lúkká (14th c.), MSw. lúkká, lykka (mod.Sw. lycka), Da. lykke. Probably it came into English as a gambling term; the I.G. dialects were a frequent source of such terms in 15-16 centuries.

The ultimate etymology of MHG. gelücke (= OHG. gī-lucchi* = O.Tent. type galukhjo-n*) is obscure. So far as meaning is concerned nothing could be more plausible than Paul's view (Beitr. VII. 133 note) that the word is connected with G. gelingen (OHG. gilingan) to succeed, turn out well or ill, as G. druck pressure with dringen to press, schluck gulp with schlingen to swallow, ruck wrench with ringen to wrench. But morphologically this assumption seems quite inadmissible, and most scholars deny the existence of etymological affinity in any of these instances. Formally, the word might be cognate with Louk 1 or 2, or with G. locken to entice (OHG. lockōn) and the synonymous OHG. luchen; but no probable hypothesis seems to have been formed to connect the meaning of the sb. with that of any of these vbs.]

[Early ME. lof, loof, app. a. OF. lof (Wace, 12th c.), later louf, used in sense 1 below. Senses 2-4 are common to various mod. langs.: F. lof, Sp., Pg. lof, Du. loef (whence I.G. loff, G. huv, Da. huv, Sw. huf). The manner of their development is obscure, and it is uncertain whether they originated in Fr., Eng., or (?most prob.) Du. Sense 5 is peculiar to Eng., and it is not easy to connect it with any of the other senses. Certain other meanings which the word has had in Du. and Fr. need to be accounted for before any hypothesis as to the primitive meaning and sense-development can be regarded as satisfactory. In early mod. Du. loef, loewe is explained as 'thole-pin' (scalum, Kilian). In the 17th c. the F. lof or loo is stated to mean 'the distance from the mast to the place on the side to which the sheet is fastened when the vessel is close-hauled'. (See the quot. from Nicot in Godef., s.v.) In the existing uncertainty as to the primary meaning, the ultimate etymology remains obscure; the current view that it represents a Teut. word cogn. with ON. lufe palm, Loof sb.¹, depends on the doubtful assumption that the 'lof' of sense 1 was a steering paddle.]

Commonly supposed to have been either a rudder or a paddle to assist in steering. Comparison with the various senses which the word has had in Eng. and other langs. (see above) suggests that it may have been some kind of machine for operating on the sails.

As a synonym of ear, it first appears early in the 16th c., and in colloquial Sc. use has entirely superseded the older word. Presumably this application is a transferred use of a word that existed earlier with some other meaning. It is possible that the sense 'ear-flap of a cap', which is the earliest represented in our quotes, may really be prior to the sense 'ear'; for similar transferences of words from parts of clothing to the parts of the body covered, cf. breach, crown, sole. If so, the word may perh. be of Scandinavian origin, with a general sense of 'something that can be pulled or laid hold of', specialized differently in Sw. lugg forelock, with which cf. Eng. dial. (Sheffield, North Derb., etc.) 'to pull (somebody's) lugs', meaning not as in Scotland, the ears, but the hair. (See LUG v.) same meaning (in Auvergne, a churchwarden). See Du Cange s.v. Luminator, Luminaria.] In St. Andrews University, a student (one in each class) who was privileged to attend the professor's lectures without payment, and to receive certain dues from the other students, in return for services rendered by him.

The Librarian of the University, Mr. J. Maitland Anderson, informs us that the first student whom he has found described in the records as 'luminator' entered the University in 1697; it is, however, probable that the title goes back to mediæval times. It is supposed that the 'luminator' originally provided lights and fires to the classes; but there is no contemporary evidence of this. Between 1800 and 1827 his duties seem to have been those of a clerk (cf. quot. a 1808). The office was abolished about 1830.

It is commonly stated that the University seal contains a representation of a 'luminator' holding a candle while a professor is lecturing. But whether the object is a candle or something else (a mace), and whether the figure holding it is meant for the 'luminator', seems to be quite uncertain.

Called luminator in Lyon's St. Andrews (1838) 171. a 1808 Ey-lavus United College (MS.), clause added by Prof. Adamson, The Luminator of each class to give in to the Hebdomadar each Monday a list of absents (from church) on the preceding Sunday. 1827 *Evidence Univ. Lunch (lʌnʃ), sb. 2 [Perh. evolved from LUMP sb. 1, on the analogy of the apparent relation between hump and hunch, bump and bunch. Cf. 'Lounge, a large lump, as of bread or cheese' (Brockett N. Country Words, ed. 2, 1829).]

It is curious that the word first appears as a rendering of the (at that time) like-sounding Sp. lonja slice of ham. LUNCHEON, commonly believed to be a derivative of lunch, occurs in our quots. 11 years earlier, with its present spelling. In sense 2 lunch was an abbreviation of luncheon, first appearing about 1829, when it was regarded either as a vulgarism or as a fashionable affectation.]

Luncheon (lʌ'nʃn). Also 7 lunchen, lunch- ion, lunching, 7-8 lunchin, 8 lunshin. [Related in some way to LUNCH sb.²

The ordinary view, that the spelling lunching represents the etymological form, appears somewhat unlikely. In our quota, the earliest form is luncheon, and this appears in our quota, earlier than lunch; and there is no evidence of a derivative verb in the 16-17th c. It is possible that luncheon might have been extended from lunch on the analogy of the relation between punch, punchion, trunch, trunchion.

2. Originally, a slight repast taken between two of the ordinary meal-times, esp. between breakfast and mid-day dinner. The word retains this original application with those who use dinner as the name of the mid-day meal; with those who 'dine' in the evening, luncheon denotes a meal (understood to be less substantial and less ceremonious than dinner) taken usually in the early afternoon. Now somewhat formal: cf. LUNCH sb.² 2.

Obviously related in some way to this Fr. word are early and dial. mod.G. lortsch, lurtʃ, lortz, lurz, the name of a game, also as adj. in lurz werden, a phrase in various games, expressing the failure to achieve some object aimed at; MHG. lortz, lurz (also lertz), mod. The most plausible supposition with regard to the relation between these words is that the MHG. lurz left, wrong, or its derivative lurtʃ (cf. linksch from link), was adopted into Fr. as a gaming term (louché adj.), and that louché sb. as the name of a game was developed from the adj. Lurch (lūrtʃ), *sb.*³ [Of obscure origin.]

The word app. occurs as the second element of lee-lurches in the first quot. below, for which later nautical and other dict. substitute lee-lurches. If lee-lurches in Falconer be not a misprint for lurches, it may represent an altered pronunciation of the older lee-latch, in the word of command 'have a care of the lee-latch', i.e. 'look that the ship does not go to leeward of her course' (Milit. & Sea Dict. 1711). It seems possible that lurch originated in the compound lee-lurch, an alteration (by association with LURCH sb. 3) of lee-lurch for lee-latch, which prob. contains LATCH sb. 2, LURCH sb. 2 inclination for the sense development cf. the etymological note on LIST sb. 1]

Lurch (lūrtʃ), *v.*¹ [app. a variant of LURK v. 1] The relation between the two forms is obscure; it is not analogous to that between birch and birch, church and kirk, beseech and seek, etc., where the OE. form has unlant. The development of sense somewhat resembles that of FORESTALL v., but has perh. been influenced by LURCH sb. 1 or v. 2]

2. Of plants, esp. of grass: Succulent and luxuriant in growth.

The literary currency of this sense (which seems still to exist in s. w. dialects) is due to the recollection of the instance in Shaks. (quot. 1610). A conjecture of Theobald's, adopted by Johnson and many later editors, substituted 'lush woodbine' (metrigr.) for 'luscious woodbine' in Mids. N. II. i. 251. The conjecture is now discredited, but the passage as amended has had many echoes in 19th c. literature.

Lushington (lʊʃɪŋtən), slang. [Punning use of the surname Lushington, with allusion to LUSH sb. 2.]

The 'City of Lushington' was the name of a convivial society (consisting chiefly of actors) which met at the Harp Tavern, Russell Street, until about 1895. It had a 'Lord Mayor' and four 'aldermen', presiding over 'wards' called Juniper, Poverty, Lunacy, and Suicide. On the admission of a new member, the 'Lord Mayor' (of late years at least) harangued him on the evils of excess in drink. The 'City' claimed to have existed for 150 years; if this claim be well-founded, the existence of LUSH sb. 2 will be authenticated for a date considerably earlier than that of our first quot. Our information is from 'Sir' B. Davies, the last 'Lord Mayor of Lushington'.

Now chiefly applied to doctrinal views held by Luther in opposition to other reformers, e.g. his doctrine as to the nature of Christ's presence in the Eucharist (see CONSUBSTANTIATION), and as the appellation of those churches, principally in Germany and Scandinavia, which accept the Augsburg Confession as their official doctrinal symbol.

-ly, suffix 1 (Forms: 1 -lic, -lic, 2-5 -lich, 4-5 -liche, 3-5 north. -lik(e), (3 Orm. -lic, -li3, -like), 3-6 -li, 4- -ly), appended to sbs. and adjs. to form adjs., represents the OE. -lic, corresponding to OFris. OS. -lik (Du. -lijk), OHG. -lik (MHG. -lich, mod.G. -lich), ON. -lig-r, -leg-r (Sw., Da. -lig), Goth. -leik-s: -OTeut. -liko-. The phonology of the OE. form, as also of the mod.G. and the ON. forms, is somewhat abnormal, the frequency in use of the suffix having caused loss of the original secondary stress, with consequent shortening of the vowel, and in ON. also voicing of the guttural. A further irregularity appears in the phonetic development in ME. The normal representation of OE. -lic was -lik in northern dialects and -lich in southern dialects. These forms are found as late as the 15th century; but the form -li, -ly, which (though parallel with the reduction of OE. ic to i, and of ME. everich to every) seems to be chiefly due to the influence of the Scandinavian -lig-, occurs in northern and mid-land dialects as early as the 13th c., and before the end of the 15th c. had become universal. In the Ormulum (c 1200) -lic (rarely -like) is used before a vowel and at the end of a line, and -li3 before a cons.; the inflected form -like (disyllabic) seems often to be used, for metrical reasons, where grammar would require the uninflected form. In the comparative and superlative (OE. -licra, -e, -licost) the ME. form had regularly -k according to phonetic law in all dialects (in the south the usual 13-14th c. form was -lukere, -lokere); but where the positive had the form -li new comparatives and superlatives in -lier, -liest were regularly formed from it.

The original Teut. adjs. in -liko- were compounds of the sb. likom* appearance, form, body (see LICH). Thus mannliko-* ('manly') means etymologically 'having the appearance or form of a man'; gōdoli- ('goodly') 'having a good appearance or form', or 'having the appearance or form of what is good'. The primitive force of the suffix may therefore be rendered by 'having the appearance or form indicated by the first element of the word'; but while in the historical Teut. langs. it has remained capable of expressing this meaning, it has in all of them acquired a much wider application.

When appended to sbs., the most general senses of the suffix in all Teut. langs. are 'having the qualities appropriate to', 'characteristic of', 'befitting'. In English of all periods it has been a prolific formative; the adjs. formed with it are most frequently eulogistic, as in kingly, knightly, masterly, princely, queenly, scholarly, soldierly (cf. manly, womanly with mannish, womanish); among the examples with dyslogistic sense are beastly, beggarly, cowardly, dastardly, rascally, ruftianly, scoundrelly. In OE., as in other Teut. langs., the suffix had often the sense 'of or pertaining to'; but the adjs. have, so far as this meaning is concerned, been to a great extent superseded by synonyms of Latin or Romanic etymology. Thus manly formerly admitted of the senses now expressed by human and masculine; for one of the older senses of timely we must now say temporal. Another use of the suffix, common to English with other Teut. langs., is to form adjs. denoting periodic recurrence, as daily, hourly, monthly, nightly, weekly, yearly.

When -ly is appended to an adj., the resulting derivative adj. often connotes a quality related to or resembling that expressed by its primary; cf., e.g., OE. lief 'dear' with löfflic 'lovely' (or, as it might be rendered, 'such as becomes dear'). The diminutive sense found in mod.G. gelblich yellowish, süßlich sweetish, though a very easy development from the original sense of the suffix, does not seem ever to have existed in English. Even in OE. -lic had app. ceased to be used in new formations from adjs.; the new adjs. f. adj. + -ly that have arisen in ME. or in mod.E. seem to be from the advs.

-ly, suffix ² (Forms: 1-2 -lice, 2-5 -liche, 4-5 -lich, 3-5 north, -like, (3 Ornu, -like, -li), 3-6 -li, 4- -ly), forming adverbs, represents OE. -lice, corresponding (functionally if not morphologically) to OFris. -like, OS. -lika (M.Du. -like, Da. -lijk, MLG. -like, mod.LG. -lik, OHG. -lich (MHG. -liche, mod.G. -lich), ON. -liga, -lega (MSw. -lika, -leka, in mod.Sw. superseded by -ligt, -ligen; Da. -lig), Goth. -leikō, derived from -lika- (see -ly!) with an adverb-forming suffix, (O)Teut. -ō, according to some repr. the ending of the abl. fem. (pre-Teut. -ād) or neut. (pre-Teut. -ōd); according to others that of the instrumental neut. (pre-Teut. -ōm).

The form-history of the suffix in Eng. is similar to that of -ly! In ME. the OE. -lice was normally represented by -liche (southern), -like (northern), the compar. being -liker, -luker, -loker (superl. -est).

The form -li, -ly, which was current in East Midland English in the 14th c., and became general in the 15th c., is probably due to the influence of the ON. -liga. In the strongly Scandinavianized dialect of the Ormulum (c. 1200) -lig and -like are used indifferently, according to the requirements of the metre. Where the positive ended in -li, -ly, the comparative and superlative ended in -lier, -liest. In the 15-17th c. forms like falslyer, traitorouslyer (Malory), softlier, justlier, weidlier (Long Barclay's Argenis 1625), easilier, -est (R. Baxter Saving Faith 1658) were common, but in later use the advs. in -ly are compared with more, most, the inflexional forms being only employed in poetry or for rhetorical effect.

In OTeut. an adv. with this suffix must have implied the existence of an adj. with the suffix corresponding to -ly! In OE., however, there are several instances (e.g. bealdlice boldly, swetlice sweetly) in which an adv. in -lice has been formed directly from a simple adj. without the intervention of an adj. in -lic. In ME. the number of these direct formations was greatly increased, and when the final -e, which was the original OE. adverb-making suffix, ceased to be pronounced, it became usual to append -ly to an adj. as the regular mode of forming an adv. of manner. It was, down to the 17th c., somewhat frequently attached, with this function, even to adjs. in -ly, as earlyly, goddily, kindlyly, livellyly, lovelily, statellyly; but these formations are now generally avoided as awkward, while on the other hand it is felt to be ungraceful to use words like godly, goodly, lovely, mannerly, timely, as advs.; the difficulty is usually evaded by recourse to some periphrastic form of expression. In examples belonging to the 16th and 17th c. it is sometimes difficult to determine whether a writer intended the adv. goodly to mean 'in a good manner' or 'in a goodly manner', and there are other instances of similar ambiguity. In the words denoting periodical recurrence, as daily, hourly, the adj. and the adv. are now identical in form. A solitary example of an adv. f. sb. + -ly with no related adj. is partly. From the early part of the 16th c. the suffix has been added to ordinal numerals to form advs. denoting serial position, as firstly, secondly, thirdly, etc. (cf. F. premierement, etc.).

When -ly is attached to a disyllabic or polysyllabic adj. in -le, the word is contracted, as in ably, doubly, singly, simply; contractions of this kind occur already in the 14th c., but examples of the uncontracted forms (e.g. doublyly) are found as late as the 17th c. Whole + -ly becomes wholly, but in all other similar instances the written e is retained before the suffix, e.g. in palely, vilely, puerilely. Adjs. ending graphically with ll lose one l before -ly, as in fully (in southern Eng. commonly pronounced with a single l, but in Scotland often with double or long l), duly (dɔːli), coolly (kɔːli). Adjs. of more than one syll. ending in y change y to i before -ly, as in merrily; in formations from monosyllabic adjs. the usage varies, e.g. dryly, drily; gayly, gaily (cf. daily, which is the only current form); shyly, slily (but always shyly); greily, grayly has always y. Another orthographical point is the dropping of the e in the two words duly, truly. It is unusual to append -ly to an adj. in -ic; the ending of the adv. is nearly always -ically, even when the only current form of the adj. ends in -ic.

Lynch law. Orig. U.S. In early use Lynch's (Lynch's) law. The practice of inflicting summary punishment upon an offender, by a self-constituted court armed with no legal authority; it is now limited to the summary execution of one charged with some flagrant offence.

Now most commonly written lynch-law or lynch law, though the capital L is still often used.

The origin of the expression has not been determined. It is often asserted to have arisen from the proceedings of Charles Lynch, a justice of the peace in Virginia, who in 1782 was indemnified by an act of the Virginia Assembly for having illegally fined and imprisoned certain Tories in 1780. But Mr. Albert Matthews informs us that no evidence has been adduced to show that Charles Lynch was ever concerned in acts such as those which from 1817 onward were designated as 'Lynch's law'. It is possible that the perpetrators of these acts may have claimed that in the infliction of punishments not sanctioned by the laws of the country they were following the example of Lynch, which had been justified by the act of indemnity; or there may have been some other man of this name who was a ring-leader in such proceedings. Some have conjectured that the term is derived from the name of Lynche's Creek, in South Carolina, which is known to have been in 1768 a meeting-place of the 'Regulators', a band of men whose professed object was to supply the want of regular administration of criminal justice in the Carolinas, and who committed many acts of violence on those suspected of 'Toryism'.

1817 S. ROANE in W. Wirt Life P. Henry (1818) 372 In the year 1792, there were many suits on the south side of the James river, for inflicting Lynch's law. 1819 W. FAUX Diary 29 Nov. in Memoir Days in Amer. (1823) 304 The people [of Princeton, Indiana]... deputed four persons to inform him, that unless he quitted the town and state immediately, he should receive Lynch's law, that is, a whipping in the woods. 1828 J. HALL Lett. fr. West 291 No commentator has taken any notice of Lynch's law, which was once the lex loci of the frontiers. 1835 W. IRVING Tour Prairies 41 'Lynch's law', as it is technically termed, in which the plaintiff is apt to be witness, jury, judge, and executioner. 1839 STONEHOUSE Axholme 112 The burning Reading's house was... a terrible example of what the Americans term lynchlaw. 1879 FARRAR St. Paul I. 570 They seized the opportunity of executing a little Lynch law. 1888 BYRNE Amer. Comm. III. 399 Lynch law, however shocking it may seem to Europeans, is far removed from arbitrary violence.

So Lynch-court nonce-wd., a self-constituted tribunal for exercising lynch law. Judge Lynch, the imaginary authority from whom the sentences of lynch law are judicially said to proceed.
